

400,000 HERE TO SEE TIGERS MAUL KAN.

woods. Behind the float of each school and department, numerous students, so-called, marched, chanting their yells and songs, and of course.

On the float of the School of Journalism a busy time was apparently being had by all. The reporters had all returned from their runs, a sort of indoor sport in which journalists indulge to keep in condition for their great mental strain daily, and the Peccade float went down to the press room as the float rounded the corner at College and Broadway.

After the last float has departed, and the final policy note of the Imperial Missouri hand has died a natural death, all Columbia and its guests will partake of a hearty meal consisting of a heavy portion of excitement, the a la mode of the day, and a follow-up of expectation for desert, helped along the digestive route by much bubbling liquid such as soda pop, ginger ale and other things. And then the big rush is on.

Rollins Field, the scene of carnage, will be a field of color and humanity. The crimson of ancient gladiatorial lore will be a corner-lot grandstand in comparison with the seething stands at the battle today. Millions of dollars were spent in erecting the famous Missouri stadium and millions of persons will literally join the stands as the whistle blows on the 1920 Tiger-Jayhawk battle.

A treat is in store for the Tiger followers, and a real treat at that. The Tiger will command the field, a sleek, well-groomed fighting animal, and his disposal of the presumptions Kansas Jayhawk will be a sight to behold and long remembered. And the thousands who arrived by street car and on foot, will needs return as foot in a body. The ancient rivals will dual, and with but one possible conclusion—a delivery of one of the worst drubbings ever recorded in the annals of the final recorder on the books of our Missouri Valley.

A MODERN SETTING

Improvements for Each Widow at Stephens Soon.

It has just been announced by the janitor at Stephens College that contracts for separate porch booths have been let. According to the janitor these booths will have a seating capacity for two. Some of them will be a little larger to allow the girls who are with new men not to appear too hasty in their advances.

The new booths will be very comfortably arranged. Those for the older girls will be upholstered and equipped for spending a pleasant evening. Each booth will be unlighted. A small mirror and vanity case will complete the equipment of each. The chaperons say that girls will be required to use these before leaving their dates.

"If the girls come in looking fresh and sweet we feel that our duty is done," they say. "It is a great worry saver for us."

Officials of the college expect to have this completed in the very near future as the girls are working so hard on their studies that their instructors can scarce keep ahead of them.
